CDC Data Centres to develop two world-class data centres in New Zealand

Infratil is pleased to announce that CDC Data Centres (“CDC”) is expanding into New Zealand.

CDC intends to develop two world-class hyperscale data centres on development sites in Auckland, New Zealand with capacity in the near term up to a total of 20MW and additional vacant land which can be progressively developed over time to support expected demand from new and existing customers.

The expansion allows CDC to meet demand from existing customers for data centre facilities in New Zealand and represents an extension of CDC’s existing secure co-location data centre ecosystem to New Zealand. In this way, CDC will continue to follow its strategy of providing highly secure, reliable and flexible data centre services to leading government and commercial clients across broader geographies.

Infratil is a 48% shareholder in CDC.
